FIVE ESCAPE COUNTY JAIL

Five inmates of the county jail at South Paris, escaped last Thursday night by sawing two of the bars over a back window. They used pillows to cover the barred wire on the jail fence. The men were: Albert Walker, 28, Fryburg; John De Grace, 27, Rumford; Arthur Ayotte, 17, Rumford; Robert Bonhard, 22, Rumford; Ernest Clark, 27, Boston.

After passing the jail yard they went to the garage of Stone and McManis where they stole two used cars, without number plates, apparently by going in different directions. Friday morning one of the cars was found between Canton and Peru where the car was with a Ford Tudor sedan belonging to Helen Remondin of Lake Mills.

The bars had been covered with tar where the cutting was done and apparently the work was done at different times.

Ayotte was arrested last Saturday night on Westbrook street, South Paris, by Police Officer Ralph Pierce, after a long chase. In chase was with him but escaped. The others were at large at last reports.

MRS. COLDON POSTER

The death of Mrs. Coldon Poster occurred at their summer home, Sunday River, Newry, Thursday, July 25th. Mrs. Poster was formerly Isabel Morris, of Prince Edward Island and was seventy years of age. Fifty four years ago she was united in marriage to Coldon B. Poster, who now lives in Maine.

They made their home in Everett, Mass., for a few years during the summer. Two children were born to them, Raymond Foster of New York and Mrs. Ed Rogers of East Hingham.

Mrs. B. Poster was very good until a few days before her death. She was a great lover of flowers and worked in her garden a great deal. Her son and daughter were with her at the time of her death. She will be greatly missed by her many friends and relatives.

Funeral services were held at the Sunday River home of the family, Sunday afternoon, July 27th, at the Universalist church, Portland. Her remains were interred in the family vault at the same place.

Hallock Pitches a No Hit No-run Game

By I. E. D.

Hallock pitched the whitest game of the season Wednesday afternoon at the high school. He was aided by his pitchers, Fred and Ed. The game was a 6-0 victory over the visiting team.

The game was played on a hot day and the visiting team was unable to get any runs. Hallock was in perfect command of the game and his pitchers did their best.

The game was a real test for Hallock and his team. They were able to hold the visiting team to zero runs and the game was a real triumph for the home team.

MAINE MUSIC FESTIVAL AT LAKEWOOD

To be Directed by Dr. William Chapman

William H. Cummings, President, and Howard L. Sweet, General Manager, of Lakewood, after negotiating with Dr. William B. Chapman for the past two years, are delighted to announce that he will conduct a Maine Music Festival at the Lakewood Theatre.

Concerts will be given on Monday and Tuesday night, August 27 and 28 and Wednesday, August 29.

No dramatic performance will take place the nights of the concert being replaced by matinees of Donato's "The Broken Dishes" on Saturday night, August 23 and "Western Union Phone" Saturday, August 24.

Dr. Chapman has had a distinguished career and has done much for music in Maine. He has been responsible for the improvement in this state of the great art in the world, and he has directed the Choral works of the great masters and grand opera in costume and action. With his Festival Chorus and Orchestra Dr. Chapman has produced "Aida," "The Trovatore," "Faust," "Martha," "Carmen" and "Hilsh" and "Carmen."

Four years ago Dr. Chapman was compelled to give up his medical work to devote himself to music. He has since been largely in the hospital, but he has not been able to give up his music. He has since been largely in the hospital, but he has not been able to give up his music.

Frenchman First to Get Idea of Sewing Machine?

France has celebrated the centenary of the invention by one of her citizens of the sewing machine. It is claimed that it was M. Barthelemy Thimonnier, a native of Artois in the Rhone, who first conceived the idea of making a machine do the work of hand-driven needles, writes the Paris correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph.

Thimonnier was a tailor, but, once he began to work on his idea, he became so engrossed in it that he neglected his own business to the point of ruin, and many of his neighbors roundly declared that he was a madman. He persevered in his experiment, which was the more difficult because he had no even an elementary knowledge of mechanics, and in 1830 took out his first patent.

An inspector of mines who happened to be visiting the region at that time realized the great potentiality of Thimonnier's invention, and installed him in a workshop in Paris.

Helium Production
The production of helium from natural gas in the United States for filling balloons and airships originated in the United States bureau of mines in the spring of 1917 just after this country entered the World war. Helium had been discovered as a constituent of natural gas in 1905 at the University of Kansas by Professor Cady and Doctor McFarland. It had been discovered in mineral substances by Sir William Ramsay as far back as 1895, and its properties were then studied sufficiently to demonstrate that it could be obtained in sufficient quantity to make it a valuable gas for balloons and airships on account of its extreme lightness and absolute inertness.

Odd Smallpox Cure
Voltaire, back in 1729, suffered from smallpox. He recovered after being in bed a month. To the father of a woman who was to play a great part in his life in the following 18 years, he made this optimistic report of the remedy which he is confident alone made possible his quick recovery.

"Smallpox is, in a simple form, merely the blood ridding itself of its impurities, and positively paves the way to more vigorous health."

"The doctor gave me smallpox eight times, and made me drink a hundred plates of lemonade. This treatment, which you will think extraordinary, was the only one which could possibly have saved my life."—Detroit News.

Along the Concrete

Reminiscence of Early Days of "Fair Harvard"

The student who works his way through college is not fairly recent phenomenon.

He can go way back in 1657 in this country and find a precedent at Harvard. Incidentally, the child prodigy can find a precedent in the same case, for the student in question, Zachariah Eaton, entered Harvard at the age of fourteen and graduated four years later at the age at which many are just getting through high school.

Zachariah, according to information received by federal educational officials, served as a waiter and rang the school bell. The steward's books show him charged with "communes" (not "commas") bread, together with "dishes" (not "dishes") from the butters' kitchen, "sandy rents and beads" (room and board), "fyer and candle" (fire and candles), "wand, etc." and a charge for "bringing corn from Charlestown."

He was credited on his account with "silver, sugar, wheat, malt, Indian (corn) beego and a bush of parsnips." He was also given, on December 31, 1657, credit for "ringings the bell and waytinge" 1 pound 2 shillings and 6 pence.

The total cost of an education at college in those days ran from $100 to $200 in silver and groceries.

Musical Trees
One of the curiosities of the West Indies is the musical tree. This species is a member of the great yucca family. On opening the great pods split open at the edges and the wind, passing through the openings, creates the sound which gives the tree its name. In Barbados there is a large valley of these trees, and the natives, naturally enough, believe the place to be haunted.—St. Nicholas Magazine.

Just Like a Man
Little Johnny is just picking up slang expressions. The other day the three-year-old was playing with his sister. He came to her side and put his arms around her and in a cloying way said to her: "I love you 'tilt' dear, I love you, and then quite suddenly he burst out "holony."

The astounded little sister came to life in time to say: "Just like a man."

World Easily Forgets
Those It Called Great
When Jane Austen was left in charge of her sister's garden, she wrote after some weeks: "I will not say your mulberry trees are dead, but I am afraid that they are not alive." Some thing of the same sort might be said of the contemporary reputation of George Sand, notes Elizabeth Drew in her "Letters of George Sand." It is the fate of pioneers for freedom to be forgotten when liberties have been won; it is the fate of "chest sellers" to be ephemerical; and it was as a pioneer in the cause of the emancipation of women and as a writer of some of the most popular novels of her age that George Sand made her reputation. In her own day her ideas and her work were as well known as her affairs of the heart. Nowadays no one reads her novels or bothers about her ideas, while her sole claim to popular fame is the number of her lovers, and the stories of her much-discussed liaisons with Alfred de Musset and with Chopin.

Concentration
Catherine, age five, was invited to a little friend's house for dinner. Catherine's mother very carefully told the little girl everything she should and should not do.

"And be sure," her mother said, knowing Catherine's fondness for pastry, "not to ask for a second piece of cake."

When Catherine came home her mother asked her all about the visit. "And did you have only one piece of cake, like I told you?" she said.

"Oh, no," replied Catherine. "I remembered what you said, so I didn't eat any cake at all. I ate two pieces of pie instead."

Atmospheric Phenomenon
Tuesday, September 6, 1881, is known in New England as the Yellow day. It was characterized by an intense brassy appearance. Many persons reported a smell of smoke in the air and this is generally believed to have been the cause of the peculiar phenomenon. It is known that extensive forest fires were raging in Canada and in the West. Another suggestion was that it was caused by an active volcano in the interior of Labrador; another that the smoke was derived from immense peat bogs in Labrador which in dry seasons burned to the rocks.

Rural Mail Boxes
The postals laws and regulations say that the posts or other supports upon which rural mail boxes are erected shall be of neat design, and may be of wood, metal, or concrete, of suitable strength and dimensions; may be either round or square, plain or ornamental, with or without fixed or movable arm, and shall be painted white. The use of effigies as supports or of supports intended to represent figures or mechanical objects, either grotesque or otherwise, is prohibited.

Well, What's Dignity?
The seems to be an idea that it is undignified to take a lively interest in food. We must all eat if we are to keep on living, and there is sound sense in making food pleasurable as well as sustaining.—Country House

Billboards

I went out for a drive today
To see the robin's nest,
To gaze at rolling country hills
And feel inspired and rest.
The scenery has disappeared
But the billboards are exquisite.
Just take a drive. The things you learn.
Will pay you for your visit.

"Each mile I read the billboards;
I profited by learning.
I changed to six new kinds of oil
To keep the valves from burning.
I smoked a dozen brands of fags
To make my voice grow sweeter;
I fastened chains to all four wheels
To make the engine sleeker.

I'm glad I learned before too late
The charm a garter lends,
What breakfast-food will bring success,
What soap will make me friends.

Meeting the Needs of Millions of People

The low-priced automobile has brought greater opportunity and added hours of recreation to millions of men and women.

BECAUSE the automobile is such an important factor in the lives and prosperity of so many people, the purpose of the Ford Motor Company is something more than the mere manufacture of a motor car.

There is no service in simply setting up a machine or a plant and letting it turn out goods. The service extends into every detail of the business—design, production, the wages paid and the selling price. All are a part of the plan.

The Ford Motor Company looks upon itself as charged with making an automobile that will meet the needs of millions of people and to provide it at a low price. That is its mission. That is its duty and its obligation to the public.

The search for better ways of doing things is never-ending. There is ceaseless, untiring effort to find new methods and new machines that will save steps and time in manufacturing. The Ford plants are, in reality, a great mechanical university, dedicated to the advancement of industry. Many manufacturers come to see and share the progress made.

The greatest progress comes by never standing still. Today's methods, however successful, can never be taken as wholly right. They represent simply the best efforts of the moment. Tomorrow must bring an improvement in the methods of the day before. Hard work usually finds the way.

Once it was thought impossible to cast gray iron by the endless chain method. All precedent was against it and every previous experiment had failed. But fair-prices to the public demanded that wasteful methods be eliminated. Finally the way was found.

A better way of making axle shafts saved thirty-six million dollars in four years. A new method of cutting crankshafts reduced the cost by $500,000 a year. The perfection of a new machine saved a similar amount on such a little thing as one bolt. Then electric welding was developed to make many bolts unnecessary and to increase structural strength.

Just a little while ago, an endless chain conveyor almost four miles long was installed at the Rouge plant. This conveyor has a daily capacity of 300,000 parts weighing more than 2,000,000 pounds. By substituting the tireless, unvarying machine for tasks formerly done by hand, it has made the day's work easier for thousands of workers and saved time and money in the manufacture of the car.

All of these things are done in the interest of the public—so that the benefits of reliable, economical transportation may be placed within the means of every one.

THE OLD MASON ELM

The elm tree stood for a hundred years
A sentinel grand and tall.
The young grew old, the old passed on,
And the elm watched o'er all.

Near the banks of the Androscoggin,
In this valley wondrous fair,
It grew and grew in strength and grace
One hundred feet in the air.

Then came a wind with its mighty force
And more quickly than one can say,
This old landmark beloved by all,
From our sight was swept away.

Goodbye, old elm! We've watched you grow,
And, though from our sight you've gone,
A picture rare stays in our minds
As the years pass on and on.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Southern Italy Devastated by Quake—Thousands Killed or Injured.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
SOUTHERN Italy was rocked and torn by the worst earthquake in that region since the terrible disaster that destroyed Messina in 1908. Death figures on the loss of life may not be known for many days. At this writing it is known that 2,013 persons were killed and twice as many injured. Communications in the stricken area broke down and airplanes were being used for relief and exploration work.

The provinces of Puglia, Campania and Basilicata sustained the worst of the tremor, but it was felt as far north as Abruzzi and Molise. The quake, which started at 1:15 in the morning, centered around the old volcano Mount Vesuvius, and the city of Naples, just north of that cone, was destroyed. In the area also the towns of Lucania, Agropoli, Bagnoli and others. Many other cities and villages were partly razed and famous palaces and churches were ruined. Even Rome and Naples were badly shaken, and several persons were killed in the latter city.

Premier Mussolini promptly took command of the situation and rescue and relief measures were put into effect quickly throughout the devastated region, the Red Cross and the army with bands of physicians and nurses, being hurried to the scene. The Pope ordered that aid be sent to places in urgent need and a relief fund held to readiness by the Vatican.

Through southern Italy was thronged with tourists. It was believed there were no casualties among the Americans there.

Two days after the earthquake a tornado swept over the Venetian diocese, killing a dozen persons and causing heavy damage over a stretch of 25 miles.

GERMANY also had its disaster, easily less in magnitude but shocking enough. During the celebration in Cologne of the evacuation of the Rhineland, in which President von Hindenburg was the central figure, a bomb exploded across the Moselle and about 60 men, women and children were precipitated into the river. Many of them were killed by the falling timbers and many others drowned. The bodies of 34 were recovered and it was feared more might be found in the river. The celebration, which had been going on for several days, was brought to an end by the tragedy.

OVER in England there was an air plane disaster made notable by the prominence of the victims. A Junkers air liner en route from France to London blew up near Newcastle and its six occupants were killed. They were the members of the British and American air forces, a noted beauty and close friend of the prince of Wales, Sir Edward Heath, Mrs. Henrietta Balfour, with her son, a woman, Lieut. Col. George L. P. Henderson, the pilot, who was rated as one of England's best flyers, and Charles Stirling, second pilot.

THAT London naval treaty is now in effect so far as American action goes. The senate by a vote of 59 to 9, ratified the pact, and next day President Hoover signed it with the gold pen used by the American delegates to the conference to sign the treaty in London. The document was then sent to London, where parliament was engaged in giving the pact its approval.

In a formal statement President Hoover said: "It is a matter of satisfaction that this great accomplishment in international relations has at all steps been given united support of both our political parties."

"With the ratification by the other governments the treaty will translate an emotion deep in the hearts of millions of men and women into a practical fact of government and international relations. It will renew again the faith of the world in the moral forces of good will and patient negotiation as against the blind forces of suspicion and competitive armament. It will secure the full defense of the United States. It will mark a further long step toward lifting the burdens of militarism from the backs of mankind and to speed the march forward of world peace. It will lay the foundations upon which further constructive reduction in world arms may be accomplished in the future. We should by this act of willingness to join with others in limiting armament have dismissed from the mind of the world any notion that the United States entertains ideas of aggression, imperial power, or exploitation of foreign nations."

Immediately after the ratification by the senate, the President asked for the names of those who voted in opposition. These were Bingham of Connecticut, Hale of Maine, Johnson of California, Moses of New Hampshire, Noble of Nevada, Pine of Oklahoma and Robinson of Indiana, all Republicans; and McKellar of Tennessee and Walsh of Massachusetts, Democrats.

FIVE senators from wheat states—Capper, Allen, McMaster, Howell and Pine—called on Chairman Legge of the federal farm board in Washington and again urged that the board adopt Capper's plan and buy a lot more wheat in the effort to boost the price. Once more Mr. Legge refused, declaring the scheme would be at best only a temporary expedient and in the long run would make the wheat problem worse. He declared the board, which has 60,000,000 bushels on its hands, would not purchase any more at this time and would sell none until the price advanced.

"What we want," said Mr. Legge, "is something permanent. Stabilization will work admirably on seasonal surpluses, but it cannot be used on an accumulative surplus. We have had an accumulative surplus in wheat for four years. Stabilization will not do it. It won't work at the present time. To follow Senator Capper's plan would only encourage the farmers in Kansas to raise more wheat and make a bad situation worse."

In Russia the wheat problem is having powerful effect in the gubernatorial primary campaign. Governor Reed, who attacks the farm board plan for reduction of wheat acreage is up for re-election by the republicans and is opposed by Frank Hauke of Council Grove, a farmer, who upholds Legge's plan.

DETROIT, which has won an unenviable reputation as a vice center in recent years, has begun to clean house. Charles Bowles, who was serving his second term as mayor, was ousted from office last week in a special recall election the majority against him being 31,000. When Bowles took office last year he appointed as public works commissioner one Joseph Littlejohn who had been forced out as police commissioner in 1919, when the conditions in Detroit were especially bad. Under Bowles, the newspapers declared, gambling houses and speakeasies began running wild and Police Commissioner Harold Emmens was said to be afraid to close them. Finally, while Mayor Bowles was attending the Kentucky derby, Emmens did raid some places, and the mayor thereupon ousted him.

Under the law a new election to fill the mayor's place must be held within 30 days of the recall election. Under the law Bowles is automatically a candidate for re-election and any other candidates may go on the ballot by presenting nominating petitions signed by 14,000 voters.

Only a few hours after the Detroit voters had put Bowles out of office, Gerald Buckley, a radio announcer who had been delivering addresses describing vice conditions in Detroit and criticizing the mayor's administration, was shot to death by the lobby of a hotel by three men who escaped. This was the eleventh gang murder in the city in nineteen days. Governor Green ordered the state police to investigate the crime independently and said he would call out state troops, if necessary, to stop the assassinations. There were points of similarity between the murder of Buckley and that of Jake Lingo, the Chicago reporter. It was asserted Buckley had been the intimate friend of underworld characters, and the Detroit police said they had in their possession an affidavit purporting to show that he had been extorting money from bootleggers.

PETER A. BOGDANOV, the Russian who heads the board of directors of the Amtorg Trading corporation, which is the official buying agency for the Soviet government in the United States, is much peevish. Grover Whalen, Matthew Woll and others told the congressional committee investigating Communist activities that Amtorg has been using its powers for propaganda against our government.

This Mr. Bogdanov strenuously denies, and he says unless the charges are "thoroughly investigated and found baseless," the continuance of Soviet-American trade "will be an almost impossible task." This was understood as a plain threat that governmental interference with Amtorg will be resented to the tune of more than $100,000,000 a year—the amount of Russian imports from American the company controls, and can withdraw.

The committee obtained from Bogdanov admissions that the Amtorg, a million dollar concern incorporated in New York state, is owned by the Soviet bank of foreign trade, which in turn is controlled by the Soviet government, and that high Communist officials have been sent here to head it, and only two naturalized Russians are among its directors. Amtorg has been extended credit of $50,000,000 by banks in this country.

CLAUDIOUS HUSTON, after conferring with President Hoover, announced that he would resign as chairman of the Republican national committee on August 7. This greatly reduced the leaders of the party, who had insisted on Mr. Huston's retirement because of revelations made before the senate lobby committee.

DEMOCRATS of Iowa in state convention adopted a plank in their platform calling for "a reasonable definition" of what constitutes intoxicating liquor and advocating a nation-wide referendum on prohibition. The reason for this stand, the resolution says, is the "nation-wide scandal" brought about by dry law enforcement methods. In this way the Democrats accepted the challenge of the Republican state convention, which voted down a resolution urging modification of the prohibition law.

ROUTING by the Egyptian War. Lums was recovered last week in Cairo and Port Said, and there were a number of deaths in the battles with the police and troops. Up to date the British had not intervened.

Mrs. Lums, a Canadian finance minister, declared before the inter-parliamentary conference in session in London that in Egypt today a struggle is going on between brutal autocracy and democracy, and that the present blood is being shed. For the fourth time in five years, he said, the Egyptian parliament has been suspended and the people guarded beyond endurance.

GLENN H. CURTISS, a distinguished pioneer in aviation, died suddenly in a Buffalo hospital at the age of fifty-two years. He was operated on recently for appendicitis and was thought to be well on the road to recovery. Mr. Curtiss was one of the foremost aviation experimenters and was ranked next to the Wright brothers. He retired from active business shortly after the World War, retaining directorships in several companies that bear his name.

Another well-known American who passed away was James Eads How, "millionaire baby," who during his life had spent a large fortune in trying to help the babies, denying himself even sufficient food and clothing and other necessities of life. He died in a hospital at Staunton, Va.

Harry B. Black, chairman of the United States Realty and Improvement corporation and known as the "mobster" in the modern growth of New York city and the construction of many of its greatest buildings, committed suicide by shooting at his country home at Lloyd Harbor, Long Island. He had been in poor health for a long time.

The Mutiny of the Albatross

by Wyndham Martin

COPYRIGHT IN THE U. S. BY WNU Service

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—Floyd Unwin, unsuccessful in his struggle with the sea, had been visiting the Albatross, a small boat, for some time. He had been told that it was a good place to go to if one wanted to see the world. He had been told that it was a good place to go to if one wanted to see the world. He had been told that it was a good place to go to if one wanted to see the world.

CHAPTER II.—Bettington arranged to go to the Albatross with his old friend Unwin. He had been told that it was a good place to go to if one wanted to see the world. He had been told that it was a good place to go to if one wanted to see the world. He had been told that it was a good place to go to if one wanted to see the world.

CHAPTER III.—Bettington, painting the Albatross, was caught in a storm. He had been told that it was a good place to go to if one wanted to see the world. He had been told that it was a good place to go to if one wanted to see the world. He had been told that it was a good place to go to if one wanted to see the world.

CHAPTER IV.—Bettington, prisoner on the ship, was told that it was a good place to go to if one wanted to see the world. He had been told that it was a good place to go to if one wanted to see the world. He had been told that it was a good place to go to if one wanted to see the world.

communication with the enemy; this was soon to seem a very suspicious action.

At the same time, in the after part of the ship Metzger and Perera faced one another. They had fallen asleep after hours of splendid planning. They had decided with enthusiasm to slay the doctor, the wireless operator and Bob Unwin as soon as morning came.

The morning came too soon; they had been scarcely two hours asleep when Kenzie awoke them. Already they were paying the penalty of the reckless mixing of drinks. Kenzie wanted to talk business. "What's going to be done?" he asked.

Perera waved an arm impatiently. He did not realize that the Albatross was rolling gently in the trough of the summer sea. He was anxious for those delirious which had been assured in Limon.

"We waste time," he declared with dignity; "go as fast as you can." Metzger sobered, saw things in a less happy light. In his mad anger toward Bettington he had forgotten that unless a competent navigator were discovered the Albatross must drift until another boat had seen her and reported her condition or proffered the help that would not be accepted.

Kenzie delivered an ultimatum. "I want to know if I'm to let my fires out or keep up steam." "Go below," Metzger commanded. "I will let you know what is to be done."

Metzger convicted himself of gross stupidity. Why had he not applauded the surgeon for the death of Sam and so gained his whole confidence? Instead of this, his insane jealousy had cropped out. It had driven the doctor to the side of the woman he loved. It had left the guest without the one man who could find him should he be in danger.

When the cook's helper rapped at the door and, since was on a legitimate errand, dared to shout, it was Crosby Todd who cautiously peered through. Bettington was rigging up.

"A letter for the Doc!" said Silvers, an electric stove in what had been Kenzie's room.

"A letter for the Doc," said Silvers. Todd drew him in and shut the door.

"Where is it?" Todd demanded. "It's for the Doc."

"I'll give it to him," Todd snatched it from him roughly. Instinctively he felt there must be something here which would give color to his suspicions. "It's all right," he said to Silvers.

Todd did not read it until he was out of sight. His eyes grew bright. Here was the evidence he needed to convince Mrs. Radway. Now she must abandon this stubbornly held faith. Allowing a few minutes to elapse he went back to the waiting boy.

"Doctor Walte will write an answer in half an hour. He says he must consider the proposition. Now run away for thirty minutes, son."

Silvers' message was received in the silence of deep gloom. "What's he mean by that?" Metzger demanded when the boy had gone. "He will not let him leave her," Perera said. "What else should it be?"

It wasn't, but I find Mary to think about and something told me I ought to, in the end you'll be glad, too."

She read it through and handed it back; she wondered that her hand could be so steady and her face so inscrutable. Yet in her heart she was saying, "It can never be truly happy again, no matter how long the years of my life."

The note was addressed simply, "Dear Andy," it began. "What's the use of quarreling about the Radway woman now? I was wrong to be so sure about it, but I'm not the old calculating type like you. We need you to take the yacht to Limon."

Quantin for you for we shall surely be reported and a search made. It won't light for her when we get to R. I'm willing that then let us make peace. Answer immediately.

"HEIRMAN METZGER."

"I told the boy to come back in half an hour. He will know enough to convince you, if this isn't sufficient."

"What do you want to do?" Mrs. Radway asked in a strained and lifeless voice. Mary looked at her with a sympathy she dared not show. "She really loved him," thought the wise Mary.

"Get the doctor in here and make him answer," Todd thought the thing was obvious. "When we're through with him, we'll hear the boy, Bob fetch him."

The moments of waiting were the bitterest that any hour of a life, in which sorrow had seldom been absent of late years, had brought Evelyn Radway. The foundations of her faith were shaken. She could not understand by what miracle of self-possession she was able to control her self and compose her features so that the others did not see her secret written there.

Bettington was looking pale and tired. There was a dull pain in his right side which had grown worse since his struggle with Sam; it was some wretched snivel, he supposed. He tried not to let it be seen. Of them all Mrs. Radway saw he suffered.

"What's this?" he asked essaying cheerfulness. "A council of defense?" Although he addressed his words to Evelyn Radway, she did not answer. But her face alone showed no emotion. Crosby Todd had triumph written on his face, with a tinge of malice in it. Bob felt and expressed contempt; he was angry with himself for having admired the man. And Mary looked at him as one might gaze at some creature of whom deadly qualities are pointed out.

Bettington dropped into a chair wearily. This was to be one more exhibition of Todd's absurdity. "It seems I'm on trial again," he said, "the pertinacious Todd my accuser." Bettington looked around him and the jury ready to convict.

"Why do you call yourself Doctor Walte, when I don't know your name?" Bettington felt himself flushing like a boy detected openly in falsehood. He knew his accuser felt he had scored a point.

"What is my name?" he demanded. "I don't know it," said Todd. "Your name is Andy Trane," Todd cried.

"I'm ready in any of the emergency cases of men at sea," Todd said in mock. Bettington tossed himself at once into the chair. His face showed it. There was confusion written on it and for a moment helplessness and despair. All that he intended to tell them, prefacing it with the story of his abduction, was now useless. They would believe it all part of the monstrous chain of excuses he had woven to tell his suspicion.

"It isn't Ome, either," he answered. "You'd better hear the whole thing from the beginning."

He was seized at Mrs. Radway's suddenly changed attitude. "Spare us that," she said. Never had he seen her look so old and unapproachable. She had learned in the space of a few seconds that the man she had idealized was, indeed, a member of this crew of crime. She had no longer any feelings of her own to consider. She must look after Mary's chain. She reached for the folded letter that lay on the table before Todd.

"May I see that letter?" Bettington asked. He read it and then angered them by smiling. Now, at least, he knew why he was prejudiced. "This is good news on the whole," he remarked, "there's a chance of saving you."

er of profession, as I think you'll believe. I was at Harvard with the father of these Unwin children, as they can find out if they put me to the test. He would recognize me as Howard Bettington."

"He did before they buried you," Bob broke in triumphantly. He remembered how broken up his father had been at the sad death of his old friend. Was this man never to make a likely statement? "There's nothing will make us believe you even if we wanted to."

Mary looked at him with deeper horror in her eyes than Bob had shown. She remembered how he had led her to talk of her father; he had seemed so interested in him that she had chattered all sorts of intimate details which he had treasured up to bolster his attempted imposition.

Bettington looked at them wearily. They were willing to believe him guilty of almost any crime, but to all that was true they turned deaf, unfriendly ears.

He shrugged his shoulders and moved toward the door. "All right, I'll see you get enough food. I suppose no advice of mine is welcome but remember your ultimate safety depends almost entirely on my efforts and I don't propose to be hampered by any childish actions of young heroes like you. You two are to remain here until I tell you otherwise."

"You're taking a whole lot on your self," Todd said angrily. "Where do you get your authority?" "By the right of being the strongest man on this ship and the most desperate," Bettington glared at Crosby Todd in such a way that the younger man felt the element of personal fear possess him. "I am engaged, single handed, in an effort to bring you to Savannah and I won't have any more scenes like these. I've stood enough from you all. When I give my size—three double cups—let me be admitted instantly. See that some one is on guard night and day."

His heart was full of bitterness. They would not even give him a chance to explain. Evelyn Radway had changed utterly. He had imagined that from her a spirit of fairness might be expected always.

"We ought not to have let him go," Todd said, when they heard the bulkhead close. "We ought to have held him as a hostage."

Mrs. Radway, thought she had come to the popular way of thinking, was not reconciled to her new leader. "You would be a child in his hands," she said contemptuously. "Can't you understand that yet?"

"If you still believe in him," Todd said, "there is a new chance to prove you are wrong. This boy Silvers ought to be back if he didn't meet Ome. I'll put him through the third degree and you can ask what questions you like."

If so happened that the furtive Silvers moved the surgeon and came rapping at the door. There was no necessity to put him through a severe cross-examination. He had that dramatic sense which made his office in publicity. What he had not heard and what he did not understand about the motives of the crew he suspected and hardly guessed at.

Sure he's one of em, said the boy to himself. "Then on Ome's word we'll believe him. His name's Ome. It's a name for a name and for a name."

Sam Unwin had killed a person named Ome. They say he was a big doctor in New York once. The police was his rule—then on the wheel."

Evelyn Radway was the only one of them who remembered the trial of a celebrated surgeon of brilliant parts and good family; he had killed the man who was threatening to prove them for forcing a check. And this was the man who had just gone from them promising safety!

"We ought to know how many men there are on board," she declared. "and how they sympathize are. Sure they can't all be bad."

Silvers shook his head knowingly. "They're a pretty hard bunch. The steward he picked 'em 'cause they were tough and he'd got the goods on em. They're afraid to go back."

Presidential Office Vacant

Inasmuch as the term of the actual President expires at midnight March 4, and it is the custom for the incoming Chief Executive to take the oath of office at midnight on March 4, there is, strictly speaking, a 12-hour period when the country is without a President. The law is silent as regards the hour when the President shall take the oath of office, and it has been a matter of personal convenience. In the event of a pressing emergency there is nothing to prevent the incoming official being sworn in during the first hour of the 4th of March, although this has never been done.

Eight features, and properly adjusted and focused. (d) All motor vehicles must be equipped with tail lamps, and must have W.M. lens. (e) Every motor vehicle of 7 feet or over in width shall have thereon at the extreme left end, the lady one number lamp visible for a distance of at least 200 feet ahead of such vehicle.

(f) Windshield Wipers. The Maine law does not require a windshield wiper, but if a car is equipped with a windshield wiper, it is well for the inspector to see if it is in workable condition. The Department urges the equipment of all motor vehicles with hand or automatic wipers as a measure of safety.

(g) Registration stickers. Number plates. Each number plate displayed shall be horizontal and shall be so fastened as not to swing, one on the front and the other on the rear, and the lower edge shall be at least 19 inches from the ground. Number plates found tilted, bent, scratched, etc., should be adjusted so that they are clearly visible and the plates should be cleaned free from all dirt and grime.

The cooperation of the motoring public is earnestly sought by the Secretary of State and Chief of the State Police to make the "Have a Life" campaign a success.

CHURCH ACTIVITIES

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH
L. A. Edwards, Pastor.
Sunday, August 3rd
10:45 Morning Worship. The subject of sermon by the pastor will be, "Cannon or Compass".

A battle ship would accomplish little in the work for which it was designed unless the compass was in a working condition. If the metal in the Gun of the ship deflect the needle of the Compass, disaster would surely follow.

The Church has often been likened to a ship and the question arises, as we see the course the ship has at times taken, has some of the cargo that it has carried deflected the compass and given it false direction? Must we dispose of some things that we have placed high value upon, that our course may be straight, that we may reach the desired haven?
